HISTORY OF ICE HOUSE

Ice House takes its name from the illusive Whiteknights Ice House that sits near to the shore of Whiteknights Lake by Wessex Hall. Ice houses were a preserve for the rich, with Whiteknights Park originally having a large country house until around 1897 when it was demolished to make space for a number of large houses, designed by Alfred Waterhouse.

The majority of the Whiteknights ice house is below ground with a drain at the bottom to take away melt water, with a perfectly bricked dome and entrance above ground covered with earth all designed to keep the ice as cool as possible. Ice was traditionally taken off the lake and shovelled into the ice house for storage until the summer and later imported from Scandinavia until the 1950's. The age of the Whiteknights ice house is unknown but is likely to have been built in the 1800's.
